The Catechism of the Crisis in the Church

(II) THE FAITH

Is it not true that man naturally has a religious sentiment? The natural religious sentiment must be carefully distinguished from the supernatural faith of the Catholic. There is certainly a need for God in the human heart, but if God does not really respond to this need, it remains an empty sentiment. Furthermore, like everything that is natural in us, the religious sentiment is wounded by original sin: it can easily lead to error and even to sin (superstition, idolatry, etc.)

Is faith not linked to the religious sentiment all the same? It is true that a sentiment of security and well-being is linked to the virtue of faith, but this is not the essence of faith. This sentiment, like all other sentiments, is changeable, sometimes waxing and sometimes waning; at times it can even disappear altogether. Great saints, like St Vincent de Paul or St Theresa of the Child Jesus, have sometimes been deprived of this sensible certainty without, however, becoming hesitant in their belief in the truth and the certitude of the Faith.

Where can one find the certain teaching of the Church on this matter? In the Anti-modernist Oath that, until 1967, all priests were obliged to pronounce before their ordination:
I hold with certainty and sincerely confess that faith is not a blind sentiment of religion welling up from the depts of the subconscious under the impulse of the heart and the motion of a will trained to morality; but faith is a genuine assent of the intellect to truth received by hearing from an external source. By this assent, because of the authority of the supremely truthful God, we believe to be true that which has been revealed and attested to by a personal God, our Creator and Lord.
