(II) THE FAITH

6) What is Faith? Faith is a supernatural virtue through which, relying on the authority of God Himself and moved by His grace, we hold everything He has revealed as absolutely true.

Does faith presuppose divine revelation? Yes, faith is the response of man to the revelation of God.

How did God reveal Himself to men? God spoke to men through Moses, the prophets, and above all through His only-begotten Son, our Lord Jesus Christ.

What are the truths that man knows thanks to divine Revelation? Thanks to Revelation, we know the attributes of God and His Trinitarian essence. We also know our own eternal destiny, which is the vision of God in heaven. Revelation shows us the path we must follow to arrive at this end: observance of the commandments of God and reception of the sacraments, the means of salvation instituted by God.

Why is faith called supernatural? The truths revealed by God, which are the object of faith, exceed the natural capacity of our intelligence. It is thus not possible to adhere to them without the supernatural help of God, which is called grace.

On what grounds do we adhere to the truths revealed by God? The reason for faith is uniquely the authority of God who reveals Himself. We believe the truths of faith because God has affirmed them and not because we had knowledge of them through our own efforts. We believe, for example, in the Holy Trinity or the divinity of Jesus Christ, not because we have discovered these truths by our reason, but because God has revealed them to us.
