Chapter IX: Do Traditional Priests have Jurisdiction?

In virtue of his ordination, a priest can bless all things and even consecrate bread and wine in such wise that they become the very Body and Blood of Our Lord Jesus Christ. But whenever in his ministry he has to deal authoritatively with people, he needs, over and above the power of Orders, that of Jurisdiction, which empowers him to judge and rule his flock. Jurisdiction is, moreover, necessary for the validity itself of the sacraments of penance and matrimony.

Now, the sacraments were given by Our Lord as the ordinary and principal means of salvation and sanctification. The church, therefore, whose supreme law is the salvation of souls (1983 code of canon law, canon 1752), wants the ready availability of these sacraments, and especially penance (canon 968). The Church wants priests (canon 1026) and empowers them liberally to hear confessions (canon 967 #2). This jurisdiction to hear confessions is to be revoked only for a grave reason (canon 974 #2).

Jurisdiction is ordinarily given by mandate from the Pope or diocesan bishop, or perhaps delegated by the parish priest. The priests of the Society of St. Pius X do not have jurisdiction in this way. Extraordinarily, however, the Church supplies jurisdiction without passing by the constituted authorities. This is foreseen in the 1983 code of Canon Law:

- when the faithful think the priest has jurisdiction which he does not have (canon 144) [common error]
- when there is positive and probable doubt that the priest has jurisdiction (canon 144)
- when a priest inadvertently continues to hear confessions once his faculties have expired (canon 142 #2), and
- when the penitent is in danger of death (and then even if the priest is laicized or an apostate, even though a Catholic priest is at hand) (canon 976, 1335)
- Therefore, the Church wanting the ready availability of penance, extraordinarily supplies jurisdiction in view of the needs of her children, and it is granted all the more liberally the greater their need.
