Twenty-fourth Sunday after Pentecost

The Catechism of the Crisis in the Church by Fr. Matthias Gaudron

IV: THE SECOND VATICAN COUNCIL

28) How did the liberals take over the Council? (contd.)

- Did other heretical theologians exercise an influence at Vatican II?

The Jesuit Karl Rahner (1904-84), while being more prudent and less explicit, spread analogous theses in his works. As early as 1949, the Holy Office had to impose silence on him regarding certain questions. Yet he enjoyed an immense influence at the Council; Fr. Wiltgen even goes so far as to name him the Council's most influential theologian:

Since the position of the German-language bishops was regularly adopted by the European [Rhine] alliance, and since the alliance position was generally adopted by the Council, a single theologian might have his views accepted by the whole Council if they had been accepted by the German-speaking bishops. There was such a theologian: Father Karl Rahner, S.J.

- Is there any other testimony on Rahner's influence at the Council?

Fr. Congar related:
The atmosphere became: "Rahner dixit, ergo verum est." I will give you an example. The Doctrinal Commission was made up of bishops, each with his own expert at his side, but also included certain superior generals (of the Dominicans or the Carmelites, for instance). Now, there were two microphones on the table of the Commission, but Rahner practically had one of them to himself alone. Rahner was a little invasive and, in addition, very often the cardinal from Vienna, Franz König, of whom Rahner was the expert, turned toward him and invited him to intervene by saying: "Rahner, quid?" Naturally, Rahner intervened....

- What was Karl Rahner's line of thinking?

Karl Rahner completely rebelled against the Church's traditional teaching, which was for him nothing but "monolithism" and "School theology." A letter he wrote dated February 22, 1962, on the occasion of the publication of the Italian version of his dictionary of theology enlightens us about his feelings toward the magisterium of the Church:

An Italian version certainly poses a special problem because of the presence at Rome of the bonzes and guardians of orthodoxy. On the other hand, I am more than ever fortified in my positions. One might also say that this little lexicon has been written in such a way that these people can understand nothing, and hence will not see what is written against their narrow-mindedness.

- Did Karl Rahner let his rebellion against the Church's Tradition and the Magisterium show during the Council?

One day during the Council, Cardinal Ottaviani, the prefect of the Holy Office, was expressing in a speech his disquietude about some innovations. He was speaking without notes since he was nearly blind, and he exceeded the allotted time. The microphone was simply switched off. Rahner commented on the event in a letter written to Vorgrimler on November 5, 1962: "Undoubtedly you have already heard that Alfrink once again cut off Ottaviani because he was talking too long. Everyone began to clap (which wasn't usual). Motto: There's no pleasure like another man's pain."
