ON THE GOSPEL OF THE 6TH SUNDAY AFTER PENTECOST

Here consider: The great devotion with which these people followed Jesus Christ our Lord, which they did for two principal reasons, the one for the miracles which He wrought, the other for the food of that marvellous doctrine with which He fed their famished souls, accomplishing that which is written : “I will draw them” to me, “with the cords of Adam, with the bands of love”, that is to say, with benefits both corporal and spiritual. With these cords Jesus Christ so held them bound, that although it was late, and that they had not anything to eat, nor knew how nor where to get themselves meat, yet they would not depart from or leave Him, but quite for getting to eat, entertained themselves with His lovely presence.

Then I will ponder the compassion which the apostles took of these devout people, but much more that which Jesus Christ Himself took of them, beholding the difference of the one and of the other. The compassion of the apostles was but little, as proceeding from frail, weak, and feeble men, who seeing these people fatigued and famished, and that they had not wherewith to sustain themselves, took pity on them, beseeching their Lord and master to dismiss them, that they may seek for themselves food, for as they were truly obedient and submissive to Him, so they would do nothing by their private authority, nor allow them to depart without their Lord's permission. But Jesus Christ beholding the scantiness of this compassion, conceived another a great deal more ample, breaking forth from the bowels of Almighty God, and would efficaciously redress their misery, to which He exhorted His disciples, saying “Give you them to eat;” as if He had said: “Extend the entrails of your compassion, and send not away these famished people to seek food, but do you yourselves seek it for them, and give it to them, since I have bestowed upon you the power and might to work miracles, or at least ask me, that I may give them, knowing I am able to do so.” In which He teaches us, that the compassion, especially of prelates, ought not to be penurious, but exceedingly ample, as David said of the mercy of God, using all the means in our power to remedy and relieve our neighbour's misery, and if we have not means of ourselves, we ought to have recourse to Him who can help us in that case, and importunately solicit Him to supply our wants.

To ponder more profoundly this mercy of Jesus Christ our Lord ; consider what He said at another time like this. “I have compassion on the multitude, for behold they have now been with me three days, and have nothing to eat. And if I shall send them away fasting to their homes, they will faint in their way, for some of them came from afar off.” In which words He shows us that it is the property of the mercy of Almighty God to feel our necessities by degrees, and also the respects and motives He has to relieve, together with the peril which we incur if He does not redress them. Of all which Almighty God takes the charge upon Himself, so that He may have compassion upon us, and give us a remedy, as if it much imported Him to assist us.
