ON MENTAL PRAYER UPON THE PASSION OF OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST

The meditations of the mysteries of the Passion of Jesus Christ our Lord are exceedingly profitable for all sorts of persons, by what ever way they walk, and in whatever degree of perfection they live : forasmuch as sinners will find in them most effectual motives to purify themselves from all their sins ; beginners, to mortify their passions; proficients, to increase in all kinds of virtue; and the perfect, to obtain union with Almighty God by fervent love.

For this cause, St. Bernard says that the Passion of Jesus Christ, even to this present day, makes the earth to tremble, rends the stones, opens the sepulchres, and rends “the veil of the Temple,” dividing it “in two, from the top even to the bottom:” for, as those who meditate the same seriously, if they be earth, through their faults and affections to earthly things, tremble with the holy fear of Almighty God, and at the severe justice which He executed upon His own Son, moving themselves herewith, to forsake their earthliness; if they be stones, by the hardness of their hearts, they become soft and tender, and rend themselves, as it were with the greatness of sorrow, as well for their own sins, as for the pains which Christ endured for them. If they be sealed “sepulchres,” by the shame which they have to discover their sins, they are “opened” by confession, to drive death from them, and to raise themselves again to newness of life. And finally, that “veil” which made the division between God and us, is torn for all, that we may, as St. Paul says, contemplate more manifestly the glory of our Lord, and the bottomless depth of His celestial secrets. And not without cause did the veil rend itself “from the top” “to the bottom;” to signify that by the means of Christ crucified, we may contemplate the height of His divinity, and of His sovereign perfections: as also the depth and profundity of His humanity, and of His illustrious and resplendent virtues.

With great reason Albertus Magnus says, that the simple remembrance and devout meditation of the Passion of Jesus Christ, is much more profitable to a man, than to fast a whole year with bread and water, and to discipline himself every day, even to the shedding of his blood, and to recite every day the whole Psalter: because these exercises, although they are good and profitable, yet being only exterior works, if we take them alone, they are not so powerful to purify the soul from vices, and to enlighten it with verities and virtues, and to perfect it in the inflamed affections of divine love, as is the attentive and profound meditation of the Passion of Christ our Lord, which works all these effects within our souls, giving, moreover, spirit and life to penances and exterior actions, to the fervent exercise of which it carries us with courage and efficacy.
