In the final hours before his arrest, which ended in his heroic death in Auschwitz, he summarized his insights into the Immaculate Conception, as though divinely inspired. Perhaps no other spoken or written words of the saints approach the profundity of these reflections:

“Immaculate Conception! These words fell from the lips of the Immaculata herself. Hence, they must tell us in the most precise and essential manner who she really is.

Since human words in general are incapable of expressing divine realities, it follows that the meaning of these words [“Immaculate” and “Conception”] must be much deeper, incomparably more profound, more beautiful and sublime than usual: a meaning beyond that which human reason at its most penetrating could give them.

The words of St. Paul [quoting Isaiah 64:4] can be applied here fully: “Eye has not seen, nor ear heard, nor has it entered into the heart of man what things God has prepared for those who love Him” (1 Cor. 2:9)...

Who then art Thou, O Immaculate Conception?... At Lourdes, the Immaculata no longer called herself “the Woman who is conceived immaculately”, but rather, as St. Bernadette tells it: “The Lady was standing then on a wild rosebush, in the same attitude in which she is shown on the Miraculous Medal. When I asked the third time, her face took on a very serious expression full of deep humility. She folded her hands as though to pray, lifted them to her bosom, looked up to heaven, and slowly opened her hands, bent down towards me and said with a slightly trembling voice: ‘Que soy er’ Immaculada Councepciou’: ‘I am the Immaculate Conception.’”

If among [human] creatures the wife takes the name of her husband because she belongs to him, unites herself with him, becomes his equal and becomes, in union with him, the instrument through which new life is created, how much more true this is in the case of the Holy Ghost's name. Immaculate Conception is the name of the Woman in whom He lives in that Love which is fruitful for the whole supernatural order.”
