15 THOUGHTS FROM FATHER FABER ON KINDNESS

The worst kinds of unhappiness, as well as the greatest amount of it, come from our conduct, therefore, come from our conduct to each other. If our conduct, therefore, were under the control of kindness, it would be nearly the opposite of what it is, and so the state of the world would be almost reversed.

Kindness is the overflowing of self upon others. We put others in the place of self. We treat them as we would wish to be treated ourselves. We change places with them. For the time self is another, and others are self. Our self-love takes the shape of complacency in unselfishness.

Kindness adds sweetness to everything.

Of great consequence is the immense power of kindness in bringing out the good points of the characters of others.

A kind act has picked up many a fallen man who has afterward slain his tens of thousands for his Lord, and has entered the Heavenly City at last as a conqueror amidst the acclamations of the Saints, and with the welcome of its Sovereign.

Kindness has converted more sinners than either zeal, eloquence, or learning; and these three last have never converted any one unless they were kind also. In short, kindness makes us Gods to each other. Yet while it lifts us so high, it sweetly keeps us low. For the continual sense which a kind heart has of its own need of kindness keeps it humble.

A kind man is a man who is never self-occupied. He is genial, he is sympathetic, he is brave.

A proud man is seldom a kind man. Humility makes us kind, and kindness makes us humble.

Kindness is infectious. One kind of action leads to another. Our example is followed. This is the greatest work which kindness does to others – that it makes them kind themselves.

If a man habitually has kind thoughts of others, and that on supernatural motives, he is not far from being a saint.
